Lordon Marker, Friday Evening, March 24.—The state of feeling in the Stock Exchange to day has presented an elmost exact repetition of the sudden panic which took place in October last, when the idea of a Russian war was just distinctly contemplated. Consols, which had previously fallen one and a half per cent during the week, have to-day experienced a further decline of one per cent. There has, however, been a complete absence of any foreign news of importance; the operations of the general public have not been of a character to show alarm; there has been no renewal of the heavy drain of specie, and, in short, on the surface nothing has been observable but a vague disposition on the part of the speculators to circulate gloomy forebodings in every quarter. The falling off of £673,846 in the bank bullion, although extremely large, is scarcely so heavy as was anticipated. Consols for money, which left off yesterday at 39, were first quoted at 88½ to ½, whence, under a succession of sales, they receded to 88½. A slight reaction then occurred, and the last official prices were 88½ to ½ for account. Subsequently there was another very unfavorable turn, and the quotation for the account descended to 87½ to 88, a state of things from which, up to the latest moment, there was accurable true, and the quotation for the account descended to 87½ to 88, a state of things from which, up to the latest moment, there was accurable true, and the quotation for the account descended to 87½ to 88, a state of things from which, up to the latest moment, there was accurable true, and the process of the service of the service of the ending the latest was a law, with a limited abount of business. April. 8.—Charles F. Danhmans against William R. Robinson and Ebenszer P. Robinson.—This was an action brought by the plaintiff, an importing merchant in this city, against the detendants, dry goods jobbers, under the firm of William R. Robinson & Co., of this city, for fraudulently, representing the credit of one Harvey G. Robinson, of Providence, a brother of the defendants, whereby the plaintiff was induced to sell the said H. G. Robinson goods and merchandise, in the month of August, 1850, to the amount of $249 69. Plaintiff also alleged, through his counsel, Messrs. Stoughton and Harrington, that the defendants and the said H. G. Robinson, and their agents, conspired together to get possession of said goods, and cheat the plaintiff out of the same; and that they also, by said misrepresentations, encouraged and induced other merchants in this city to sell said H. G. Robinson, upon credit, a large amount of goods, of the value of nearly $60,000, and that the defendants represented the said H. G. Robinson to be a person safely to be trusted and given credit to; and that the plaintiff, confiding in such statements, sold and delivered said goods to said H. G. Robinson, on credit; whereas the defendants, it is alleged, knew, at the time of said representations, that the said H. G. Robinson was not a person safely to be trusted, and that soon after he got possession of the goods he failed for about $100,000, and that the defendants and the said H. G. Robinson was not a person safely to be trusted, and that soon after he got possession of the goods he failed for about $100,000, and that the defendants; and it was contended that at the time of the defendants; and it was contended that at the time of the defendants; and it was contended that at the time of the defendants; and it was contended that at the time of the defendants; and it was contended that at the time of the defend

AFFAIR OF HONOR IN MOBILE—We learn that a duel was fought yesterday at one o'clock, in the vicinity of this city, between two genilemen from New Orleans. Their names we have not learned, though we understand that it grew out of private difficulties. They came over in the morning boat, and repaired to the grove south of the "Six Sisters," or Gorden's Row, on Conception street, where the meeting took place. The weapons first used were small swords, but one of these breaking, with only a small wound to one of the parties, they took to pistols. At the first fire one of the gentlemen was wounded in the back part of the hip. The combat now terminated. We understand that neither of the wounds are regarded as

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL. MONEY MARKET.

SUNDAY, April 9-6 P. M. The news from Europe, received by the steamship Europa, is not calculated to help financial and commercial matters much on this side of the Atlantic. The effect of the hostile movements going on in every part of Europe was just beginning to show itself, and we must look for panies and excitements such as have not been realised within the past thirty years. No one can anticipate the ultimate effect of the operations now progressing through-out the Old World. For a long time the public mind, both in this country and in Europe, rested in quiet and apparent security amidst the negotiations, and it was the hope and belief of nearly every one that a general war would be avoided. Financial and commercial operations were therefore carried on as usual, and credits were ex-tended with full confidence in a favorable and profitable matters much on this side of the Atlantic. The effect o would be avoided. Financial and commercial operations were therefore carried on as usual, and credits were extended with full confidence in a favorable and profitable result. As negotiations proceeded, it became more apparent that difficulties of a very grave character were daily springing up, and the probabilities of an interruption in the peace of the world were daily increasing. Notwithstanding all these indications, the hope was entertained that some alternative would arise, some way be devised to avoid disturbing the existing peaceful relations. The market value of public securities was therefore sustained, speculations in breadstuffs continued, and quotations for cotton fluctuated only to about the usual extent. On this side of the water a different state of things existed. Every steamer from Europe was looked for with the greatest anxiety, and from the excitements produced in our local markets from time to time by foreign advices, it appeared as though we were more directly and immediately concerned in the matters at issue between England, France and Russia, than the people of those countries. Quotations for stocks, breadstuffs and cotton would suddenly rise or fall, as the prospects of a war were good or bad, and our markets were kept continually agitated. This state of things was the more extraordinary, from the fact that on the other side financial and countered in the states are a section of the states and section and continuations are a section of the states are a section of the states are a section and continuation and continuations are a section of the states are a section and continuation and continuations are a section and continuation and continuations are a section and continuation and continuations are a section and continuations are a section and continuation and continuations are a section and continuations are a section and continuation and continuations are a section and continuation and continuation are a section and continuation and continuation are a section as a section and continuati kept continually agitated. This state of things was the more extraordinary, from the fact that on the other side financial and commercial matters were moving along steadily, without any unusual fluctuations. The contrast was very great, and must have appeared most absurd. A change has now come over things in England. Panics have occurred in the money markets of London and Paris, and the markets generally have become as much depressed and as stagnant as in this country. Consols have fallen off rapidly, breadstuffs have declined, and the demand much reduced, and cotton has become a dull, heavy article of trade. We are, however, yet far in advance of England in the effect of the recent panics. When consols have fallen one per cent, some of our first class stocks have fallen from three to five, all on account of the war in Turkey. Now it appears to us that just the reverse of this should have been the effect. The fact is that our stocks are held by speculators who have moderate our stocks are held by speculators who have moderato means, very little nerve, and very little knowledge of the operation of cause and effect. They buy one day and operation of cause and effect. They buy one day and sell another, without one good reason for doing one or the other; and it is therefore to be hoped that the first puff of wind from an unlooked for direction will capsise their frail and poorly ballasted craft. In times like these the shrawd, far-seeing capitalists step in and select such securities as have substantial value, which are ununwarrantably depreciated. They who keep aloof from the market in times of excitement, with the means to purchase during such foolish panics as have recently been so prevalent, will make more money in one or two operations than all the rash bull and bear speculators in Wall street. On the other side of the Atlantic the market value of stock securities moves steadier and slower one way or the other. Prices are not so sensitive, and are way or the other. Prices are not so sensitive, and are not affected by such slight causes. There is no doubt but that our markets have been operated upon too powerfully by the European advices which have lately come to hand; and it is our impression that a few days will suffice to bring about the second sober thought, and creates favorable change in the property of the second solver thought, and create a favorable change in the complexion of the stock market. Everything that can possibly occur in Europe, affecting commercial affairs, has been anticipated, and the effect stready realized. The actual commencement of hostilities on sea and land, would not have given good cause for such a depreciation in stocks as we have experienced, and it is a question if both of the fleets in the Baltic should, like the Kilkenny case, annihilate each other, it would not have a favorable influence on the price of stocks in Wall street. Such is the inconsistency of cause and effect in stock speculations that we are never surprised at anything, however contradictory.

Quotations for stocks current at the close of the market yesterday, compared with those ruling at the close of the previous week, show a decline in nearly every one on the list. Money continued moderately easy. There is a good supply and an active demand. The banks are not expanding or contracting, but preserve a uniform move-ment, in the face of quite an increase in the offerings for discount. Call loans are avoided. The brokers

Previously reported in 1854. 3,891,534 49 Total this year$4,826,333 27 This brings up the aggregate to a large amount, and the effect upon the movements of the banks cannot be otherwise than unfavorable. It is reported that the two steamers from San Francisco, of the 16th of March, had on freight upwards of two millions of dollars. If so, our supplies will be maintained for a time; but a weekly export like the above would soon create a panic equal to any we have realized for some time.

The anthracite coal trade in the Lehigh region is not as encouraging as was hoped for. The cold weather checked operations for several days, and up to the 1st inst., only 2,222 tons had been shipped—some 3,000 tons more than to same time last year. The Mauch Chunk Gazette of the eth inst., says—"The prospects of business are by no means flattering. The boatmen generally do not seem inclined to enter into contracts on the terms offered by the companies. Many of them remain here wait ing for a rise in the price of freight, and some, it is said have returned home with their teams. With the naviga-tion in first rate order, and readiness and ability on the part of the miners and contractors, to supply coal to the full capacity of the canal, this interruption of business is much to be regretted." The trade in the Schuylkill region is more active. The Schuylkiil Navigation Company brought down, for the week ending on Thursday, 21,135 tons, making a total for the season of 79,790 tons, against 47,549 tons to the same time last year. On the Reading Railroad, for the week, there has been brought down $7,709 tons, making for the year 489,326 tons, against 349,441 tons to the same time last year. The ex-cess of coal shipped from the Schuylkill region this season, thus far, over the shipments of last season, is 122,146 tons. This is very well, but there is still an active
